This is a deluxe tour guide of the Gettysburg battlefield, in the mode of the U.S. Army War College series. In fact, Ms. McDonald was a student of Jay Luvaas, the chief contributor to that series. There are twenty-four stops in the tour, beginning with McPherson's Ridge and ending at the National Cemetery. And the book has some attractive features. It includes brief (and fairly elementary) essays on strategy, tactics, weapons, equippage, and the "psychological character" of the armies and their soldiers. The narrative section that accompanies each tour stop is replete with photographs, detailed tactical maps, and excerpts from the Official Records that describe the combat action. Appendices provide the orders of battle for both armies.

But unlike the War College series, this is more picture book than tour guide. The text is overwhelmed by the maps and photographs, most of the latter being portraits of participants in the battle. Its 11x8 format makes it less handy than the 8x5 War College guides, and it is not nearly so authoritative as the Luvaas-Harold Nelson guide to this same battle.
